

When conventional garden spaces are oriented vertically, unexpected vertical spatial effects are generated. These spaces are then further hollowed out and interconnected in the manner of Taihu stones, resulting in a spatial system that is exceptionally rich, engaging, and coherent. Functional zones are subsequently embedded dispersively within this intricate spatial framework.

Public Tea Space